The Flavour We Love

Meat Galore

Salty snacks and fruit mixes with meat-based flavours remain a niche proposition. Meat flavours represent the largest share of innovations, while poultry and fish flavours are less developed. Brands can look to the popularity of meat snacks for flavour inspiration and consider innovating meat-inspired flavours that appeal to consumers who may not want a meat snack, but are seeking for meat-like flavour.

Playful textures

Mengniu Chunzhen (纯甄) Yummy Yogurt (馋酸奶) China

Targeting young consumers, Chunzhen makes use of ingredients like proteins and popping candies that contribute to health and playfulness. The Yummy Yogurt contains 31% less sugar and 35% more protein than the minimum amount required by national standards.

Responsible snacking and lifestyle

Tudòs Potato Chips Malaysia

The potato chips are handcrafted in small batches and come in 4 flavours such as Naughty Truffle and Flirty Mala. Tudòs advocates for open conversations around safe sex and hopes the brand can bring awareness to the importance of developing healthy attitudes towards sex and encourage responsible sexual behaviours.

Enrich your body

Befco Tanita Shokudo Calcium Senbei Japan

Japanese snack brand Befco has addressed consumer concern about calcium deficiency by launching rice crackers fortified with dried bonito and lactic acid bacteria for added bone health benefits. Calcium fortification in salty snacks can prove to be an effective way of contributing sufficient calcium requirements for older consumers' daily diets.

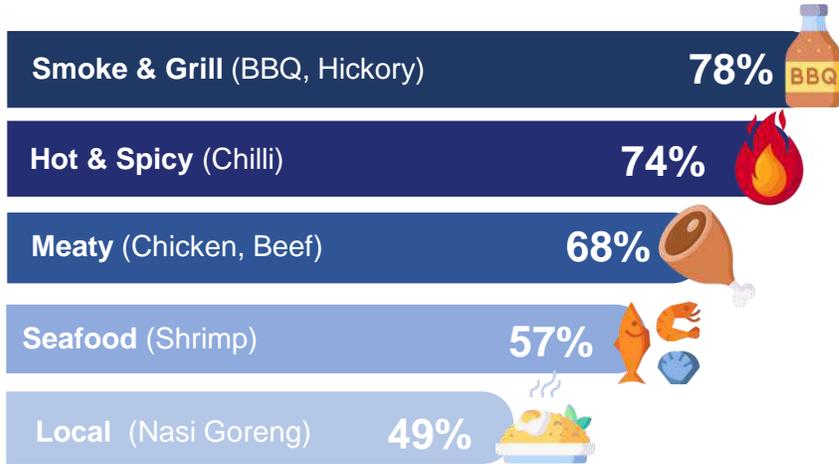

Country Spotlight: Indonesians Love For Snacks

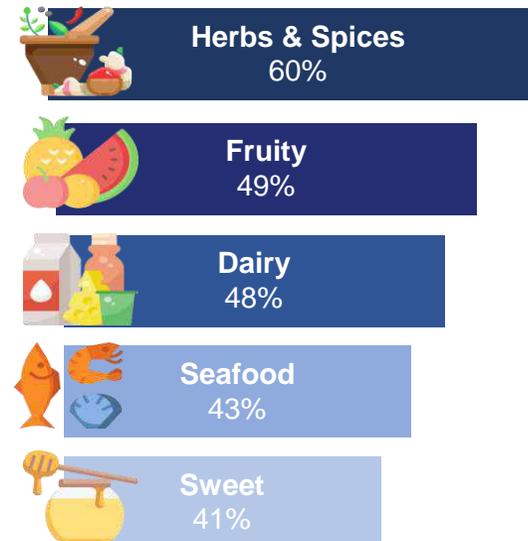

Indonesians enjoy snacking. With the easing of COVID-19 restrictions, the performance of savoury snack is set to grow from expansion of snack occasions. As Indonesians resume pre-pandemic activities, more opportunities for impulse purchases and on-the-go consumption should boost sales of savoury snack.

McCormick Flavour Solutions conducted an online survey in March 2022 to understand snacking habits and perceptions of Indonesians (n= 405; 43% Male, 57% Female).*
