Today, many wellness-focused consumers are seeking out food and beverages that feature flavors that are both healthful and delicious. Products and flavors that feature antioxidants, vitamins and minerals that provide health benefits and delicious tastes are performing well in the food and beverage space. And as consumers are pushing towards holistic health across all aspects of life – emotional, mental, and physical included – it’s time for product developers to maximize health and wellness in their product introductions. But wellness claims aren’t the only motivator – delicious and refreshing tastes that satisfy consumer cravings are key. Let’s take a look at how your brand might be able to make your mark in this space.
Why it’s Interesting - Functional + Flavor

From optimizing gut health, to balancing immunity and hormonal changes, product offerings that can deliver both flavorful and functional benefits continue to be top of mind for consumers.

The Food and Drug Administration is seeking to redefine the term “healthy” on food packaging. The proposed rule will require food products featuring the term “healthy” on packaging to contain a meaningful amount of food from one of the food groups—fruits, vegetables, dairy, grains, protein, and oils. Such products will also be required to adhere to specific limits for certain nutrients like saturated fat, sodium, and added sugars.

Gut Health

As a way to improve gut health and maintain gut sensitivities, brands are creating indulgent dessert snacks such as brownies and cookie dough bars that also have added probiotics and prebiotics. This trend also translates to other categories in the food and beverage space beverages, yogurt, better-for-you meals and more.

Scientists have found that the more diverse your diet, the more diverse your gut microbiome. Studies show that a high level of microbiome diversity correlates with good health and that low diversity is linked to higher rates of weight gain and obesity, diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, and other chronic diseases.
